Hi everyone,

As previously mentioned to Robert, my vote is for GitHub. The integration with IDEs, version control, attribution, and accessibility are all very nice.

Cheers,

The key one is August 15 of this year -- that's when Google Code will switch to read-only mode.  Commits to the Subversion repository will be no longer be possible.  So before that date, we the developer community, need to find a new home for hosting the L-II project (i.e., source code repository, issues, developers wiki).  We'll need to identify possible options, evaluate them, and select one, so we can develop a transition plan for the new hosting service with as minimal disruption to our development activities.
