Yes I'm on it.

Last Thursday, Google announced its intent to shut down Google Code. The announcement includes the dates of various phases of the service shutdown. The key one is August 15 of this year -- that's when Google Code will switch to read-only mode. Commits to the Subversion repository will no longer be possible. So before that date, we the developer community, need to find a new home for hosting the L-II project (i.e., source code repository, issues, developers wiki). We'll need to identify possible options, evaluate them, and select one, so we can develop a transition plan for the new hosting service with as minimal disruption to our development activities.
